

Jeffrey Eaton, M.A., is a graduate of the Northwestern Psychoanalytic Society and a fellow of the International Psychoanalytic Association. A founding member of INSPIRA, the International Seminar on Psychoanalytic Intervention and Research into Autism, he is in private practice in Seattle, providing psychoanalysis and psychotherapy to children and adults. He also speaks, teaches, and consults internationally.

“This wondrous collection of seamlessly connected essays constitutes a rich and engaging personal diary of the author’s efforts in his work and his meditations about what he has found.”

— From the foreword by James S. Grotstein, M.D., author of But at the Same Time and on Another Level and A Beam of Intense Darkness: Wilfred Bion’s Legacy to Psychoanalysis

“This is a passionate book, devoted to the psychoanalysis of suffering and bearing within its style as well as its content a tenacious intellection and ferocious determination to confront mental turbulence.”

— Christopher Bollas, Ph.D., author of The Freudian Moment and The Infinite Question

“A superb exploration of the importance of emotional pain—how we deal with it, how we can deal with it. Eaton weds psychoanalysis and Buddhism to give birth to new ways of experiencing ourselves and working with our experience. He has a special talent for the autistic spectrum of children in therapy, but has something to give all of us that speaks to our difficulties in living. This is a book not only for mental health workers, but for all who want to benefit from fruitful reflections on the human condition.”

— Michael Eigen, Ph.D., author of Contact with the Depths, Feeling Matters, and The Sensitive Self
